The Life Agent's Fate.

BY AN AGENT.

The evening sun was sinking fast,
When through a western village passed
A man who bore a heavy load and ice,
A banner with this queer device—
"Insure your life!"The madmen at the village pump,
The beggar at the sewage dump,
The man who with a viand will,
He erst brought, with accents mild—
"Insure your life!"The lawyer in his dusty den,
The preacher at his holy pen,
The doctor 'mid his drafts and pills,
Were urged to soften all death's ill—
"Insure your life!"He sought the blooming kitchen maid;
The mother at her busy trade;
The blacksmith near his grimy forge;
The gourmand 'mid his dairy gorge—
"Insure your life!"Into a charcoal burner's hut,
At eve in business search he put,
And plainly said before the dame
His company's most attractive claim—
"Insure your life!"Said he, "your goodness, here is poor,
"The hungry wolf stands at your door,
"If you should die, there'd disappear
The light that now gives all life cheer—
"Insure your life!""But if upon an annual plan,
"A thousand placed at his command,
"At death's dread knock, he'd catch his eye,
"And deem it a blessing should you die—
"Insure your life!"The passion fired it up her nose,
As he made length she rose;
"You get it," she calmly to him said,
"I'll buy yer biller—squash yer head—
"Insure yer life!"He "got," amidst a shower of logs,
Of milk-pans, brick-bats, shot-guns, dogs;
And from the traitor female's snarl
Escaped himself beneath a bush—
"Insure your life!"The storm went down, and where he crept
His last weak cry, he died, but kept
His cry alive—'t was his last—
"Insure your life!"The passion fired it up her nose,
As he made length she rose;
"You get it," she calmly to him said,
"I'll buy yer biller—squash yer head—
